2/13/07	Spencer ("Spence") James Akers / (17) Massachusetts	Monument Mountain Regional High School/ Leysin American School/ High school/ Switzerland	Leysin, Switzerland/ Illness/ Spence was spending his senior year attending a work-study-adventure school in Switzerland. Tuesdays and Thursdays were ski days. Two friends had followed Spence down the mountain, but then lost track of him. Spence was later found under an avalanche. LAS teachers spoke of how often they'd taken the same trails with no problems, and "with only the luck...on that day...it hadn't been [my] time." LAS faculty assured the family, Spence had "exited this world at the pinnacle of worldly happiness." In contrast, a local mountain expert spoke of the danger of these mountains and the regularity of avalanches, expressing frustration at the death of another young person who perhaps did not understand the risks of the landscape. In the immediate aftermath of Spence's death, the family traveled to Switzerland and met with Spence's friends, saw all the places that had been important to him, including the place of his death. In a blog written by Spence's father,	Spence loved to ski. He taught fellow students how to wax skis and snowboards and how to improve their technique. He also loved his time at LAS. Though Spence was said to "hold his emotions close," classmates described him as awestruck by the beauty of some of the places he'd visited while in Switzerland.

6/29/07	Tyler Hill/ (16) Minnesota	Mount Westonka High School/ People to People Ambassador’s Trip/ High school, academic program/ Japan	Japan/ Illness/ At the age of five, Tyler was diagnosed with diabetes. He learned about his illness and for over a decade managed it well. As a teenager, Tyler received a letter from People to People saying he’d been “chosen” as a student ambassador. Given his health status, his parents focused on People to People’s safety protocols. The company assured them that they had a “24-hour response team that could manage any medical emergency.” Thirteen days later, Tyler was brain dead and on life	Tyler was an honors student at his high school. He particularly loved history and considered Dwight D. Eisenhower to be one of his heroes. Because of his diabetes, Tyler knew he’d not be eligible to serve in the military, but he aspired to be an “ambassador of peace.” Family said he was, “Easy to talk to...a humble teen.”

Tyler returned from the hike feeling so unwell that he requested medical attention, as well as a phone call to his parents. Neither of these requests was granted. Tyler died from untreated altitude sickness. His family filed suit against People to People. In 2009, the case was settled for an undisclosed amount. The Hill family went on to found ClearCause, which has been rebranded as Depart Smart, an online travel safety course geared to student travelers. In 2015, Ambassador’s Group, the parent company of People to People, closed. In 2016, People to People reorganized under Enriching Cultural Experiences (ECE). https://www.consumeraffairs.com/news04/2008/01/p2p_hill.html https://forums.childrenwithdiabetes.com/threads/settlement-people-to-people-teen-with-type-1-in-japan.42106/ http://www.tylerhill.org/	He “made friends easily and reached out to new kids.”
