02/20/14 Sunday	John Durkin/ (21) New Hampshire	Bates College/ Trinity College/ Undergrad, study abroad/ Italy	Rome, Italy/ Intentional Injury-Homicide, assault with injury/ John was found dead on railroad tracks. Initial news reports suggested that John had wandered away from friends after an evening outing to Campo de Fiori. However, John's family hired a team of investigators. After a 28-month investigation, forensic pathology showed that John had been drugged with GHB and struck several times by a blunt instrument on the right side of his head. Robbery was presumed the motive, as John's cell phone and money were gone. Train station surveillance video showed John walking into St. Peter's station at 5:15am. At 6:35am, John's body was found on the tracks. The Durkin family said, "...the pathologist reported that John would likely have been very disoriented...[and this] may explain why he walked in an opposite direction from Campo de Fiori to his campus housing."	As a youth, John enjoyed many sports, particularly soccer, baseball and football. John was analytical, calling game plays at a young age. He wrote for the school newspaper, sang in the choir, and was captain of his senior year football team. In college, John was an economics major. He had just completed a challenging semester and was looking forward to his study abroad in Italy. Family describes John as "faithful, kind, loyal, witty, disciplined, competitive and loving." In the aftermath of John's death, his family established the John Nolan Durkin Scholarship '15 at Bates to honor John's legacy and support Bates' scholar-athletes.
